

Education, Communication, History, and Outreach Team

This fact sheet provides information about the U.S. Department of Energy Office of Legacy Management Education, Communication, History, and Outreach Team.

Who Is the Education, Communication, History, and Outreach (ECHO) Team?

The ECHO Team was created by the U.S. Department of Energy Office of Legacy Management (LM) to support the organization's strategic goal of engaging the public, governments, and interested parties. We are the communication bridge between LM and the public.

Mission

To communicate information about former nuclear defense sites to all internal and external stakeholders.

Vision

We are dedicated to communicating accurate and timely information to communities impacted by former nuclear defense sites in order to protect human health and the environment. We are also committed to transparency, integrity, and empathy in all our work. People matter first to the ECHO Team. We honor cultural heritage and cultivate and nurture relationships through our education, communication, history, and outreach work. We are the communication bridge between LM and the public.

What Does the ECHO Team Do?

We communicate and engage with local communities, state and local governments, and tribal nations in person, print, and digitally through:

- Public meetings
- Conferences
- Outreach events
- Fact sheets
- Brochures
- Stakeholder surveys
- Press releases
- Quarterly Program Update
- LM website
- Social media

Hopi Tribe Department of Natural Resources representatives join LM for a tour of sites in Grand Junction, Colorado.

LM participates at Central High School's career fair in Grand Junction, Colorado, discussing STEM occupations.

Who Does the ECHO Team Serve?

The ECHO Team provides information about LM sites and programs to local communities, tribal nations, and local and state governments.
